Disaster risk has become more complex due to the impending effects of climate change, disruptive technology, rapid infrastructure development, and growing anthropogenic pressures. Under current development pathways, we should prepare to face the possibility of more compounding hazards and complex risk landscapes in the future.

The “4th International Symposium on Disaster Resilience and Sustainable Development”, referred to as DRSD 2025, organized by the Asian Institute of Technology, gathers experts, practitioners, policymakers, and students from Asia Pacific and beyond to present a discourse on improving development practices to reduce long-term complex risks and promote equitable sustainability. With wide-ranging thematic areas and diverse participation, DRSD 2025 is well placed to explore the complex challenges faced by Asia Pacific and beyond and collaborate for effective solutions.

The DRSD 2025 symposium will take place from 24-26 November 2025 in a hybrid format, offering both on-site and online participation options. Online participants will have access to live streams of all plenary sessions (keynotes and panel discussions). Thematic Technical Sessions will be conducted in two separate tracks for on-site and online participants.

The symposium aims to foster critical discourse on enhancing development practices to reduce systemic and long-term disaster risks while promoting inclusive and equitable sustainability. With a comprehensive range of thematic areas:
